CHARACTER APPEARANCE

ALLIES & ORGANIZATIONS

ORIGINAL– Having little attachment to tradition, I am able to discard existing systems and methods and pull together disparate ideas from their extensive knowledge base, with a little raw creativity to hold them together, to formulate bold new ideas. If presented with chronic, systemic problems and given rein to solve them, I respond with unabashed glee.
CHARISMATIC – I have a way with words and with that others find intriguing. My confidence, quick thought and ability to connect disparate ideas in novel ways create a style of communication that is charming, even entertaining, and informative at the same time.

PERSONALITY TRAITS

THE COST OF CONTRARIANISM- As I see it, most people are too ready to do as they're told and blindly conform to social norms, pressures, and standards. I enjoy the mental exercise of questioning the prevailing mode of thought, and I take a certain pleasure in uncovering the value of underdogs and outliers. My active mind can't help but rethink the things that everyone else takes for granted and push myself in clever new directions.

IDEALS

A proud noble once gave me a horrible beating, and I will take my revenge on any bully I encounter.

BONDS

INSENSITIVE – Being so rational, I often misjudge others' feelings and push my debates well past others' tolerance levels. I don't really consider emotional points to be valid in such debates either, which magnifies the issue tremendously.

FLAWS

In the bustling realm of ideas and words, I emerged as an original thinker, a master of words, and an advocate for change. Tradition holds little sway over me, and I revel in discarding established systems to weave together disparate ideas into bold new concepts. Given the reins to tackle chronic problems, I respond not with trepidation but with unabashed glee, eager to reshape the landscape of knowledge.

Charismatic to the core, I possess a gift for words that intrigues and captivates. My confident demeanor, quick thinking, and ability to connect seemingly unrelated ideas create a communication style that is not only charming but also informative. My words dance with the eloquence of a bard, entertaining and enlightening in equal measure.

Contrarianism courses through my veins, a rebellious spirit that questions the prevailing norms and finds value in the underappreciated. I relish the mental exercise of challenging established modes of thought, pushing the boundaries of what is accepted, and venturing into clever new directions. The allure of the unconventional and the pleasure of uncovering hidden gems drive my active mind to rethink everything taken for granted.

In my past life as a local administrator among the peasantry, I faced an oppressive lord who rescinded an unpopular decree only after I led a symbolic act of protest against it. The price of my defiance was a brutal beating by the lord, an injustice that fuels my determination to take revenge on any bully I encounter, ensuring that the oppressors face the consequences of their actions.

Fortune seems to favor me at the most opportune moments, granting me inexplicable luck that manifests precisely when needed. A disguise kit, my versatile tool, allows me to assume the appearance of those I've encountered, adding

CHARACTER BACKSTORY

Milil

Alignment: Neutral Good
Alternate Names: The Lord of Song, The One True Hand of All-Wise Oghma
Category: None
Domains: Light
Pantheon: Faerûnian
Symbol: Five-stringed harp made of leaves

Milil is the god of poetry, eloquence, and song. He is a god of creativity and inspiration, of the entire song more than just the lyrics or the music. He represents the finished thought, the result of the process that takes an idea from conception to realization. Milil is most venerated by bards, troubadours, and other entertainers, but anyone preparing to entertain or speak before a crowd might offer Milil a brief prayer for a successful performance. Those who seek inspiration in a creative endeavor also pray to Milil.

His icons depict him as a handsome male, sometimes a human, sometimes an elf, and even a half-elf in places (such as Aglarond) that have a large half-elf population. He is variously depicted as young or old, but his identity is always apparent because of his five-stringed harp made of silvery leaves, which he carries constantly. He is the ideal to which all performers aspire: poised and confident, winningly charismatic, and a source of inspiration for those who listen to him. He is said to have total recall of anything he hears or that is spoken while music plays, as well as utmost skill at improvisation.

Holy sites dedicated to Milil are often found in performance venues and schools of music. Whether the site is a vast concert hall or a small choral chamber, it must have excellent acoustic qualities. Milil's priests are patrons of the arts in addition to being performers themselves, and they frequently act as tutors in the arts of performance at his shrines and temples.

Like Deneir, Milil is sometimes thought of as being in service to Oghma. In these portrayals of the deity, Milil is the god's left hand, also referred to as the One True Hand. This expression isn't meant to denigrate the right hand (Deneir); rather, it stems from the fact that left-handedness is more often associated with great artistic ability and the belief that the greatest art comes from the acceptance of truth.
