CHARACTER APPEARANCE

ALLIES & ORGANIZATIONS

INDEPENDENT – Conformity is more or less synonymous with mediocrity. Creative and self-motivated, I strive to do things my way. I can imagine few things more frustrating than allowing arbitrary rules or conventions to stand in the way of my success.

DETERMINED – I am known for being ambitious and goal-oriented. I won't rest until I've achieved my own definition of success – which usually entails mastering the subjects and pursuits that matter to me.

PERSONALITY TRAITS

THE CHESS GAME OF LIFE
Life is like a giant game of chess. Relying on strategy rather than chance, I contemplate the strengths and weaknesses of each move before I make it. And I never lose faith that, with enough ingenuity and insight, I can find a way to win – no matter what challenges might arise along the way.

IDEALS

I'll never forget the crushing defeat my company suffered or the enemies who dealt it.

BONDS

ARROGANT - I might be knowledgeable, but I am not infallible. My self-assurance can blind me to useful input from other people – especially anyone I deem to be intellectually inferior. I can also come across as needlessly harsh or single-minded in trying to prove others wrong.

FLAWS

In the grand tapestry of life, was born to defy the shackles of conformity. Independence is my guiding star, and I find little patience for arbitrary rules or conventions that hinder my success. Creative and self-motivated, I navigate the world on my terms, setting my sights on goals that demand ambition and determination.

Life, to me, is a chess game—a strategic endeavor where each move is a calculated step toward success. I contemplate the strengths and weaknesses of every decision, never losing faith that ingenuity and insight will pave the way to victory, regardless of the challenges that emerge.

The bitter taste of defeat lingers in my memories, a crushing blow dealt by orc enemies. I carry a dagger, a memento from my best friend who fell in that conflict, the weight of his loss forever etched in my heart. He died in my arms, a stark reminder of the price paid in the pursuit of glory.

My prowess in archery is unmatched, bordering on the magical. As a sharpshooter, I make shots that defy the laws of probability, my arrows finding their mark with uncanny precision. It's a skill that sets me apart, a testament to the hours spent honing my craft.

Once an officer, I bear a military rank—a symbol of authority and influence. Soldiers loyal to my former organization recognize my standing, deferring to my command if of lower rank. This recognition grants me access to military encampments and fortresses, where my rank holds sway.

Arrogance is a shadow that lingers within me. While knowledgeable, my self-assurance blinds me to valuable input from others, especially those I deem intellectually inferior. This arrogance can manifest as harshness or single-minded determination to prove others wrong. Yet, I continue my journey, a lone archer in pursuit of

CHARACTER BACKSTORY

Tymora

Alignment: Chaotic Good
Alternate Names: Lady Luck, Our Smiling Lady
Category: None
Domains: Trickery
Pantheon: Faerûnian
Symbol: Face-up coin

Tymora is the bright-faced goddess of fortune, the one to whom gamblers and game-players pray in Faerûn. Our Smiling Lady is said to love none so much as those who gamble with the utmost skill and daring. Yet she is thought to watch over all who take risks to better their fortunes.

The battle cry of the followers of Tymora is "Fortune favors the bold." Someone might say words to Tymora before any endeavor in which a little good luck would help, but not when an incidence of bad luck might occur. (On such occasions folk pray to Beshaba to spare them from bad luck; praying to both is thought to anger both goddesses.) One common method of divining the future is to toss a coin to a stranger (typically a beggar) and ask if it's heads. If it is, the coin is left with the stranger as payment for Tymora's favor. If it's not, the stranger can choose to keep it (and the bad luck) or return it.

Those who favor Tymora - as distinct from folk who invoke her name by mumbling over the dice - tend to be daring sorts. Adventurers and gamblers make up much of their ranks. They all have the belief that what is good about their lives is the result of having both good luck and the bravery to seek it out. Tymora has worshipers among all sorts of folk: the dashing young noble, the risk-taking merchant, the daydreaming field hand, and the scheming ne'er-do-well.

Priests of Tymora and temples devoted to Lady Luck are scarce, since her faith tends not to stress a need for intermediaries: "Let the lucky man and the Smiling Lady suss it out," as the old saying goes.

Shrines to Tymora at gambling parlors aren't unusual, however, and sometimes such establishments attract a priest and effectively become temples.
