CHARACTER APPEARANCE

ALLIES & ORGANIZATIONS

- Knowledgeable – Debaters rarely pass up a good opportunity to learn something new, especially abstract concepts. This information isn't usually absorbed for any planned purpose as with dedicated studying, people with the Debater personality type just find it fascinating.
- Original – Having little attachment to tradition, Debater personalities are able to discard existing systems and methods and pull together disparate ideas from their extensive knowledge base, with a little raw creativity to hold them together, to formulate bold new ideas. If presented with chronic, systemic problems and given rein to solve them, Debaters respond with unabashed glee.

PERSONALITY TRAITS

- BREAKING THE RULES - As I see it, most people are too ready to do as they're told and blindly conform to social norms, pressures, and standards. I enjoy the mental exercise of questioning the prevailing mode of thought, and I take a certain pleasure in uncovering the value of underdogs and outliers. My active mind can't help but rethink the things that everyone else takes for granted and push them in clever new directions

IDEALS

I will find an ethical endeavor for immortality, even if it costs me my reputation and my fortune.

BONDS

Very Argumentative – If there's anything Debaters enjoy, it's the mental exercise of debating an idea, and nothing is sacred. More consensus-oriented personality types rarely appreciate the vigor with which Debater personalities tear down their beliefs and methods, leading to a great deal of tension.

FLAWS

They died when I was five.
One carriage accident. Two coffins. Endless silence.

All the gold in my family's vaults couldn't buy me a proper goodbye. No last words. No second chances. Just tutors and trustees and cold marble halls filled with echoes of people who once loved me.

Most heirs waste their inheritance on estates or indulgences. I invested mine in research. Not in healing — too slow. Not in divination — too vague. I studied "death". Not to worship it, but to "understand" it, dismantle it, rebuild it.

People flinch when I say the word "necromancy". They picture madmen raising armies of rotting corpses. I picture restoration. Reunion. A life undone, "rewound". Call it unethical if you like — but have you ever sat across from the ghost of your mother in a mirror, knowing she can't touch you?

I didn't come to this through reckless obsession. I came to it through careful, relentless logic. I've read treatises from every arcanist worth citing — and many not. I've debated priests in candlelit forums, argued circles around them. "Death is natural," they say. So is illness — but we cure that. "The gods decide who lives and dies." Then perhaps the gods should "defend their logic," because I have questions.

I don't want to conquer death. I want to "correct" it.

Of course, my work has… consequences. It's hard to find allies when you challenge the world's favorite taboos. Even harder when you're right. The nobles whisper that I've lost my mind. Let them. Let them choke on their inherited dogma. I'm not here to please them — I'm here to challenge the rules they're too afraid to rewrite.
