CHARACTER APPEARANCE

ALLIES & ORGANIZATIONS

OPEN MINDED – Tolerant and accepting, I try not to judge anyone else's beliefs, lifestyles, or decisions. I prefers compassion to fault-finding, and I feel empathy even for those who have done wrong. Because I am so accepting, I often become confidants for my friends and loved ones – and occasionally for total strangers.

PASSIONATE – When an idea or movement captures my imagination, I want to give my whole heart to it. I may not always be outspoken, but that doesn't diminish my strong feelings for a cause that speaks to my beliefs and

PERSONALITY TRAITS

THE GIFT OF EMPATHY - I share a sincere curiosity about the depths of human nature. Introspective to the core, I am exquisitely attuned to my own thoughts and feelings, but I yearn to understand the people around me as well. I am compassionate and nonjudgmental, always willing to hear another person's story. When someone opens up to me or turns to me for comfort, T feel honored to listen and be of help.

IDEALS

It is my duty to protect my students.

BONDS

SELF CRITICAL – I believe in my unique potential, and I desperately want to live up to it. But this can cause me to have unrealistic expectations for myself. When I fail to live up to these visions, I may accuse myself of being useless or selfish or woefully inadequate. Taken too far, this self-criticism can discourage me, leading me to give up on even my dearest dreams.

FLAWS

I was raised in a monastary devoted to the sanctum of knowledge, a place where the pursuit of wisdom and compassion intertwined seamlessly. Guided by the principles of the Way of Mercy, my destiny was shaped by the duty to protect my students, a responsibility I held with unwavering devotion.

My scholarly training took a unique turn as a Philosopher, delving into the secrets of lore and seeking knowledge not only for myself but for those who sought enlightenment. My innate ability to discern information led me to libraries, scriptoriums, and learned individuals, becoming a conduit for the flow of wisdom within my community.

Open-mindedness defines my character. I hold a tolerance and acceptance that transcends judgment, embracing the beliefs, lifestyles, and decisions of others. Compassion, rather than fault-finding, is my preferred approach, making me a confidant not only for friends and loved ones but even for strangers seeking solace.

Passionate and driven by conviction, I would wholeheartedly commit myself when an idea or cause resonated with my beliefs. While not always outspoken, my strong feelings manifest as unwavering dedication to pursuits that align with my principles.

However, I grapple with self-criticism, holding myself to unrealistic expectations born from a belief in my unique potential. The internal struggle often leads me to accuse myself of inadequacy when I fall short of my own visions, a challenge that threatens to discourage me from pursuing my dearest dreams.

The gift of empathy marks my interactions. Intrinsically curious about the depths of human nature, I not only delve into my own thoughts and feelings but seek to understand those around me.

CHARACTER BACKSTORY

Myrkul

Alignment: Neutral Evil
Alternate Names: The Lord of Bones, Old Lord Skull, The Reaper
Category: None
Domains: Death
Pantheon: Faerûnian
Symbol: White human skull

Myrkul is an ancient god, one of three former mortals who were raised to deityhood when Jergal grew weary of his divine duties and distributed his influence between them. Myrkul became the god of death and the dead, and ruled over the City of the Dead for centuries until he, in turn, was slain. In time Myrkul returned, for can death itself truly ever die? Myrkul's faithful see him as the Reaper, who lays claim to souls and brings them to Kelemvor to be judged.

Myrkul is a deity of death, decay, old age, exhaustion, dusk, and autumn. He's the god of the ending of things and hopelessness, as much as Lathander is the god of beginnings and hope. Folk don't pray to Myrkul so much as dread him and blame him for aching bones and fading vision. Myrkul is thought to be passionless and uncaring even of his most devout worshipers. Those who take Myrkul as a patron tend to be morose, taciturn, and obsessed with the dead and the undead. Like many followers of Kelemvor and Jergal, priests of Myrkul serve as undertakers and typically keep their patron's identity secret.

Shrines to Myrkul or engravings of his holy symbol appear in many places where humans bury their dead, but full-fledged temples are rare. The few that exist are hallowed places where the dead from hundreds of miles around are brought for internment, even if they were not of Myrkul's faith. There is little space set aside for the living in such a location, usually a single modest shrine, but its catacombs and ossuaries are vast. In the deepest chamber of each temple rests a throne, and upon that throne sits the doomwarden - the preserved corpse of the most revered saint in the history of the temple (often its founder). Initiates to the faith are brought to kneel before a temple's doomwarden, where they must spend a night and a day fasting and meditating in complete darkness.
