CHARACTER APPEARANCE

ALLIES & ORGANIZATIONS

CREATIVE AND PRACTICAL – I am very imaginative when it comes to practical things, mechanics, and crafts. Novel ideas come easily, and I love using my hands to put them into action.

OPTIMISTIC AND ENERGETIC – I am usually up to my elbows in some project or other. Cheerful and good-natured, I rarely get stressed out, preferring to go with the flow.

PERSONALITY TRAITS

DARE TO DIFFER Rather than some sort of vision quest though, I am merely exploring the viability of a new interest when I make these seismic shifts. While my mechanical tendencies can make me appear simple at a glance, I am actually quite enigmatic. Friendly but very private, calm but suddenly spontaneous, extremely curious but unable to stay focused on formal studies, I can be a challenge to predict, even by my friends and loved ones.

IDEALS

One day I will return to my guild and prove that I am the greatest artisan of them all.

BONDS

STUBBORN – As easily as I go with the flow, I can also ignore it entirely, and usually move in another direction with little apology or sensitivity. If someone tries to change my habits, lifestyle or ideas through criticism, I can become quite blunt in my irritation.

FLAWS

In the bustling city of Waterdeep, where the clatter of machinery and the whirr of gears harmonized with the hum of creativity, I found a living as an artificer. A member of the prestigious guild of smiths and metal-forgers, I embodied the creative and practical spirit that defined the gnomish approach to invention.

I was a unique and enigmatic member of the guild. My workshop was a haven of imaginative contraptions, where novel ideas took shape under my nimble hands. Optimistic and energetic, I rarely succumbed to stress, always focusing on the next project with cheerful determination.

However, I was not without my quirks. My stubbornness was legendary within the guild. When someone attempted to change my habits or criticize my work, I could become blunt and irritable. My explosive energy, a store of impulsive creativity, often led me to take my interests in bold new directions, leaving even my closest friends bewildered by my sudden shifts.

As a respected guild artisan, I reveled in the benefits of my membership. Fellow guild members provided me with lodging, food, and even the assurance of a proper funeral if the need arose. The guildhall, a central meeting place for artisans, became my second home, offering opportunities to connect with patrons, allies, and potential hirelings.

My artificer abilities showcased my knack for infusing magic into mundane objects. My specialty lay in creating small enchantments that brought everyday items to life with a touch of mystic charm. The magical properties ranged from creating light, emitting sounds, recording messages, to adding static visual effects. My creations were as diverse as my ever-shifting interests. However, as I explored the creation of artillery, and mistake resulted in an explosion in the guild hall and I was expelled from the

CHARACTER BACKSTORY

Gond

Alignment: Neutral
Alternate Names: The Wonderbringer, The Inspiration Divine, The Holy Maker of All Things
Category: None
Domains: Forge, Knowledge
Pantheon: Faerûnian
Symbol: Toothed cog with four spokes

Gond is the god of artifice, craft, and construction. He is revered by blacksmiths, woodworkers, engineers, and inventors. Anyone who is crafting something might say a prayer to Gond to guide the work, but folk know that Gond smiles most brightly upon new inventions that others find useful.

Priests of Gond wander the North dressed in saffron vestments, adorned with sashes that contain within their folds gears, locks, hooks, and bits of steel, tin, and wood that might prove useful in a pinch. They also wear belts of large, linked metal medallions and enormous sun hats. A traveling priest of Gond offers services to distant villages as a tinker, a carpenter, and a civil engineer rolled into one, ready to help build a better paddock gate, dig a new well, or mend pots or furniture that might otherwise go to waste. All priests of Gond keep journals in which they record ideas, inventions, and innovations discovered in their travels, and take great delight in meeting fellow priests and sharing their finds. In large cities, the Gondar construct temples that serve as great workshops and inventors' labs. Wandering priests turn their journals over to the resident scribes at such temples, who then record the priests' observations for posterity and the benefit of all.

Most who favor Gond practice time-honored crafting professions: they are smiths and engineers, architects and weavers, leatherworkers and jewelers. Even so, this faith has a well-earned reputation as a haven for crackpot inventors and visionaries.

The center of Gond's worship on the Sword Coast lies in Baldur's Gate, where the faithful have erected two huge structures in honor of the Wonderbringer: a temple called the High House of Wonders and a museum of craft and design called the Hall of Wonders. Lantan had been the preeminent place of Gond's worship in the world until a century ago, when the island nation disappeared, and since its return the few Lantanese merchants seen in Sword Coast ports have said little about the present state of their homeland.
