CHARACTER APPEARANCE

ALLIES & ORGANIZATIONS

ORIGINAL – Traditions and expectations are secondary to me, if a consideration at all. I love to experiment with new styles, and constantly find new ways to stick out in the crowd.

AESTHETICS AND SHOWMANSHIP – Not stopping at mere outfits, I inject artistic creativity into my words and actions, too. Every day is a performance, and I love to put on a show.

PERSONALITY TRAITS

LIVING WITH PASSION - I love the spotlight, and all the world's a stage. Many famous people like are indeed actors, but I love putting on a show for my friends too, chatting with a unique and earthy wit, soaking up attention and making every outing feel a bit like a party. Utterly social, I enjoy the simplest things, and there's no greater joy for me than just having fun with a good group of friends.

IDEALS

I would do anything for the other members of my old troupe.

BONDS

SENSITIVE – I am strongly emotional, and very vulnerable to criticism – I can feel like I've been backed into a corner, sometimes reacting badly. This is probably my greatest weakness, because it makes it so hard to address any other weaknesses brought to light.

FLAWS

In the bustling city of Neverwinter, where magic and mystery permeate the air, I was born into a world that often misunderstood and feared me due to my tiefling heritage tied to the icy depths of Levistus. Yet, from a young age, I embraced my heritage with fervor, turning heads and capturing attention with my wild magic and devilish charm.

Growing up in the vibrant and eclectic district of performers and artists, I quickly discovered my love for the stage. I joined a traveling troupe of entertainers known as "The Whimsical Wanderers," a group that valued creativity and bringing people smiles above all else. I became the heartbeat of the troupe, my wild magic manifesting in dazzling displays of color and illusions that left audiences in awe.

As an Entertainer, I thrived on the excitement of new experiences, constantly reinventing myself both on and off the stage. My outfits were a kaleidoscope of colors, and my flute, infused with the essence of my sorcery, became an extension of my artistry. Every performance was an opportunity to experiment with new spells and weave magic into my music.

Traditions and societal expectations held little sway over me. I lived by my own rules, embracing the chaotic energy that fueled my wild magic. While my emotional and vulnerable nature made me sensitive to criticism, my passion for the stage and the love of my fellow troupe members fueled my drive to overcome any setbacks.

One fateful night, during a particularly mesmerizing performance, disaster struck. A surge of wild magic went awry, causing an unintended explosion that left a portion of the audience in shock. Though no one was seriously harmed, the incident led to the disbandment of The Whimsical Wanderers. Feeling responsible and devastated, I set out on my own to master my wild magic and control the unpredictable forces

CHARACTER BACKSTORY

Milil

Alignment: Neutral Good
Alternate Names: The Lord of Song, The One True Hand of All-Wise Oghma
Category: None
Domains: Light
Pantheon: Faerûnian
Symbol: Five-stringed harp made of leaves

Milil is the god of poetry, eloquence, and song. He is a god of creativity and inspiration, of the entire song more than just the lyrics or the music. He represents the finished thought, the result of the process that takes an idea from conception to realization. Milil is most venerated by bards, troubadours, and other entertainers, but anyone preparing to entertain or speak before a crowd might offer Milil a brief prayer for a successful performance. Those who seek inspiration in a creative endeavor also pray to Milil.

His icons depict him as a handsome male, sometimes a human, sometimes an elf, and even a half-elf in places (such as Aglarond) that have a large half-elf population. He is variously depicted as young or old, but his identity is always apparent because of his five-stringed harp made of silvery leaves, which he carries constantly. He is the ideal to which all performers aspire: poised and confident, winningly charismatic, and a source of inspiration for those who listen to him. He is said to have total recall of anything he hears or that is spoken while music plays, as well as utmost skill at improvisation.

Holy sites dedicated to Milil are often found in performance venues and schools of music. Whether the site is a vast concert hall or a small choral chamber, it must have excellent acoustic qualities. Milil's priests are patrons of the arts in addition to being performers themselves, and they frequently act as tutors in the arts of performance at his shrines and temples.

Like Deneir, Milil is sometimes thought of as being in service to Oghma. In these portrayals of the deity, Milil is the god's left hand, also referred to as the One True Hand. This expression isn't meant to denigrate the right hand (Deneir); rather, it stems from the fact that left-handedness is more often associated with great artistic ability and the belief that the greatest art comes from the acceptance of truth.
