Someone I loved died because of a mistake I made. That will never happen again.

BONDS

FLAWS

They told me it would be simple.

Infiltrate the royal court of a rival kingdom. Earn trust, gather secrets, and when the time came—remove the tyrant at the center of it all. I had done things like it before, many times, in service to my homeland. I was a whisper in the dark, a shadow behind velvet curtains. For most, the job would've ended there.

But then… I met "the love of my life."

They weren't like the others at court—too sincere, too kind for that place. A flicker of warmth in a world ruled by masks and cruelty. What started as strategy became something else. Something dangerous. I let my guard down. I let them in.

We both knew the risks, but we dreamed anyway. Of freedom. Of change. Of a life after duty.

And then it all came undone.

Our bond and my deception was discovered. I barely escaped, the mission in ruins. They… weren't so lucky. The court made an example of them, as if compassion were a crime. I still hear the silence that followed.

After that, I vanished.

The kingdom I once served believes I failed. Maybe they're right. But I know the truth—I found something more powerful than any crown or dagger: purpose. Not the kind written in orders, but one born of grief, love, and conviction.

Now, I move from place to place, offering my skills where they're needed—quiet work that disrupts the powerful who abuse their reach. Each job earns me coin, yes, but more than that, it brings me closer to what I seek: justice, not just for the one I lost, but for others who suffer in silence under the chains of tyranny.
