Practical - For me, the world is meant to be felt and experienced. Truth is stranger than fiction, and I prefer to see and do than to wax philosophical about "what-ifs".

Observant - With all this focus on the here and now, on doing and acting, it makes sense that I am a natural when it comes to noticing real, tangible things and changes.

FLAWS

I was born in the icy peaks of the north, descended from Frost Giants whose legacy is as deep as the glaciers that shaped the land. My towering frame and ice-blue eyes mark my ancestry, and growing up, I heard tales of the giants' rise and fall, their downfall a reminder of how even the greatest can fall.

I've always felt a deep connection to the wild. While my ancestors ruled the frozen wilderness, I sought harmony with it. My tribe's ancient runes, which once controlled the elements, intrigued me. I focused on the ones tied to ice and storm, hoping to understand the past and prevent such disasters from happening again. Yet, while I study the past, I'm more about action than theory. I'd rather experience life firsthand than overthink it.

I live in the present, constantly seeking excitement, sometimes to my detriment. I can be reckless and tend to neglect long-term plans, preferring to rely on luck or the help of friends. They're used to me jumping into things without thinking, but they also keep me grounded when I get carried away. My true passion lies in understanding the fall of great civilizations, especially the giants and dragons. The ancient runes hold the secrets to why they fell, and I want to ensure it doesn't happen again.

Despite my impulsive nature, I deeply care about the world around me. I believe in living alongside nature, not controlling it. I find joy in the wild, talking to animals and embracing the moment. I live to experience life fully, knowing that the world is meant to be felt and lived, not analyzed endlessly.
