PERSONALITY TRAITS

IDEALS

Someone I loved died because of a mistake I made. That will never happen again.

BONDS

FLAWS

I was trained to vanish into shadows, blend into crowds, walk through enemy gates like I belonged there. And for a time, I did. Spy, scout, agent of the crown—they called me all that and more. I served with pride. I believed in my kingdom, in duty, in doing the job right the first time.

Then I met the love of my life.

They weren't supposed to be part of the mission—just another courtier in that gilded viper's nest. But they saw through me, not to my secrets, but to something softer. Something I thought I'd locked away. They knew who I was long before I told them. And when I did, they chose me anyway.

That choice killed them.

They caught wind of my cover. I escaped through smoke and crossbow bolts. They didn't. They called it treason. I called it my failure. I should've known. Should've planned better. Should've done something.

Now? I still scout. Still serve. But I don't let feelings cloud the mission. I keep my promises, double-check every detail, and never—never—leave anything to chance. I don't improvise. I don't gamble. I don't fail.

I tell it like it is, even when people don't want to hear it. I work harder, walk farther, and keep my eyes open when others sleep. Because I won't make the same mistake twice. I won't lose someone again because I trusted that love would be enough to save them.

Call me stubborn. Call me rigid. But when the mission is on the line, I get it done.

No more surprises. No more mistakes.

Not on my watch.
